Enrichment Course in Review of TED Talks

Rationale

TED is committed to conducting research and disseminating information through brief speeches and presentations. The objective is to provide accessible information and education to a global audience. On the TED stage, scientists, researchers, technologists, business executives, artists, designers, and other world specialists share "Ideas Worth Spreading"—valuable new insights and trailblazing research—in their respective disciplines. These TED speeches were recorded at partner events, independent TEDx conferences, flagship TED conferences, and salons presented in the NYC World Theater. Six speeches that were recorded at TED conferences were made available online in June 2006. Since then, the research, editorial, and curatorial teams have gone over every presentation given at a TED event before it is posted on TED.com. These internet videos have helped TED gain a huge international following that now numbers in the millions. This positive response inspired the TED website to become the home of TED Talks, a meticulously curated, continuously expanding educational library. More than 3 billion times a year are currently spent watching or listening to these talks. A TED Talk requires much research and creation. The majority of TED Talks undergo meticulous but mild editing. A stylish clickable time-coded transcript and full subtitles are available for almost every TED Talk that is hosted on TED.com.

We at AIMS, provide our students with an add-on course on Review of TED talks. Learning from other's experiences leads to self-improvement. This rationale is used in this course. MBA students in semester IV are required to undertake desk research on TED website and submit their learning along with relevant documentation.
